HISTORIC BREVARD

During the late 1950's when the Navy was testing its underwater- launched missile the Polaris, some early firing mishaps caused more than a bit of panic. During one test in September 1958, the missile shot straight up instead of heading out to sea. The Range Safety Officer's destruct button also failed and the second stage landed in the Banana River less than 100 yards from the Hitching Post Trailer Park. Predictably, this incident was followed by a flurry of 'For Sale' signs being posted in the park.
